DFW INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, Texas (May 19, 2002) — DFW hosts the first major meeting of airport executives since 9/11 beginning today, with airport security technology, deadlines and costs at the top of agenda. More than 2400 airport industry professionals will attend the largest American Association of Airport Executives (AAAE) Conference and Exposition since it began 74 years ago. The meeting is being held at the Wyndham Anatole Hotel in Dallas.

Top federal and congressional leaders will address the group, including Transportation Security Administration (TSA) Chief John Magaw, FAA Administrator Jane Garvey and U.S. Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison of Texas. Donald Carty, CEO and Chairman of AMR Corporation will also speak at the conference.

"Clearly much has changed in our world since 9/11. This meeting allows airports, airlines and government officials a strategic chance to candidly communicate about these changes and the future," says Jeff Fegan, CEO of DFW Airport, which has posted one of the strongest rebounds of any major airport in the country. "The TSA has a challenging job ahead in working with 429 airports across the country. It's important for all of us to remember this is a team effort between the nation's airports, the airlines and the federal government, with traveler's security and convenience as the top priorities."

Several business announcements are expected by DFW Airport over the course of the four-day conference, including news of new international business and a new survey detailing airport business priorities, travel trends and security.

More than 250 companies occupy over 325 booths showcasing the latest in aviation-related advancements and technology. Attendees will be able to tour featured exhibits such as a new "Security Pavilion" which is being offered for the first time as part of the exposition.

The host airport has constructed a "DFW Village" which is showcasing companies involved in the Airport's $2.6 Capital Development Program. Also included in the DFW Village is the prototype of the new Automated People Mover (APM) System Train Car that conference-goers can actually walk through and experience. Conference participants will be updated on DFW's award winning designs for the Automated People Mover System and the new International Terminal D with 35 Capital Development affiliated companies. DFW's Small and Emerging Business, DPS, and Marketing departments will also be exhibiting.
